UPDATED version - TSRF guide to applying ethical research principles

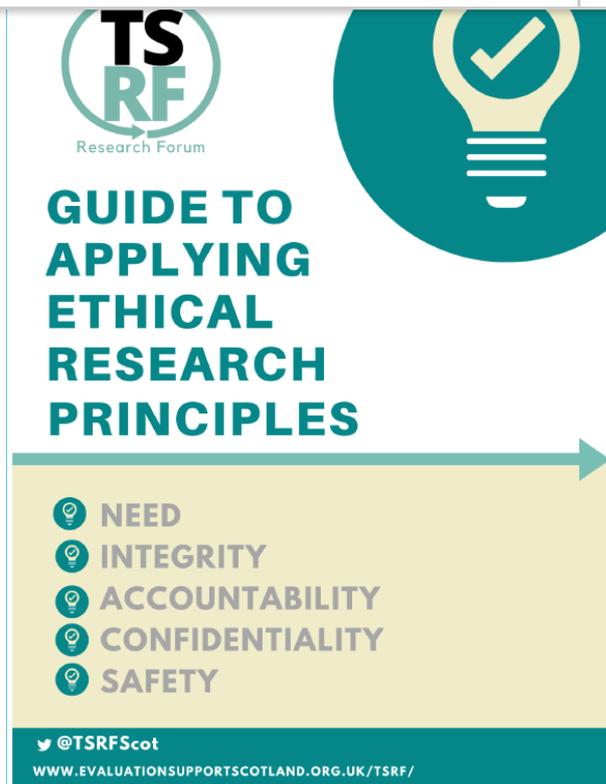

Following a consultation which started at the TSRF conference in February 2021 we have now published the final version of the guide to applying ethical research principles.

We have added some illustrative examples of both good practice and not so good practice to illuminate some of the pitfalls that can be easily and unintentionally stumbled upon and case studies to describe ethical decision making in practice.

Please feel free to tell others about this resource. You are welcome to upload this link to the resource on your websites.

What's next

We are interested to hear from anyone using the guide, not only third sector researchers. We will publish an accompanying document which will include case studies about how the guide is being used in the third sector. The case studies will be presented at an event in February 2022. If you would like to be part of this, please email us.

Researching Well - TSRF conference report and video

We have created a written report and a video with the highlights from our Researching Well conference so you can take your choice about how you'd like to be reminded about the conference or for those who couldn't attend, to find out what happened.

The conference webpage has the recorded presentations, slides and workshop information too.

The latest joint Policy Scotland/TSRF event about using third sector evidence to influence policy took place on 1st June with Robbie Calvert, Royal Town Planning Institute and Hannah Tweed, The ALLIANCE talking about how they used their research to influence policy. Sarah Weakley talked about the Mendelow matrix - a stakeholder mapping tool.

Top tips from the event

- Map out your stakeholders including national, regional, and local stakeholders
- Understand your stakeholders – what would interest them about your research?
- Work with your stakeholders across the lifetime of your project – from designing the research, recruiting participants to dissemination of your results/report
- Think about using a variety of ways to get your message out – briefings, social media, events, presentations, writing and speaking opportunities, webpages

TSRF workplan 2021-2022

Back to top

Each year the TSRF produces a workplan. This year we will work on the ethics of data sharing, and capture learning about researching online.

Resources

We will produce resources:

- on data sharing
- case studies showcasing organisations using the guide to applying ethical research principles.

Events

- We are planning events in partnership with Policy Scotland to support third sector researchers. The next one in August/September 2021.

See the full workplan.

Spotlight on TSRF member's research approach: Corra

Corra is an independent trust with a 10-year strategy that aims to strengthen and amplify people's voices and their power to make change. We continue to make grants and work alongside communities with increasing focus on challenging the barriers, active listening and responding to power dynamics that can influence change.

Corra also supports a learning culture where internal and external learning forms part of our knowledge and insights to help shape how and what we do. Corra is currently involved in several collaborations that aim to influence power and voice for people and communities we seek to serve.

As part of our place based working Corra is funding two communities (Dunterlie and Fernhill) to be part of the Knowledge is Power action research programme.

Corra is one of the partners in the Listening Fund Scotland, a dedicated fund supporting youth organisations to embed active listening within their organisations. The Centre of Youth Impact has just published findings from this work Listening Fund Scotland evaluation.

Corra is also one of the partners who initiated the Social Action Inquiry in Scotland looking at how people can make social action happen in their communities which can make Scotland a better place to live. The Inquiry has now appointed two Co-Chairs and is currently recruiting two Co-Leads one with a focus on the social action and the other with a focus on research. More information and updates

Public Health Scotland Covid-19 Research Repository

At the June TSRF meeting Julia Green from the Knowledge Services Team at Public Health Scotland gave a demonstration of the new Covid-19 research repository. This is a single with a focus on Scotland. It is accessible to use and the research is mainly open access. It includes evidence papers, pre-prints, blogs, and videos from research by academic institutions.

Have a browse at this interesting and useful resource.

The screenshot shows the COVID-19 Research Repository website. At the top, there are navigation links: 'Our areas of work', 'Our organisation', 'News', and 'Contact us'. Below this is a breadcrumb trail: 'Home > Our areas of work > COVID-19 > COVID-19 Research Repository'. The main heading is 'COVID-19 Research Repository'. On the left, there is a search section with a search bar and buttons for 'Browse by topic', 'Browse by author', 'Browse by publisher', 'COVID-19 research resources', and 'Research support'. On the right, there is an 'About the repository' section with a description and a link to 'Read more about the COVID-19 Research Repository'. Below that is a 'Getting in touch' section with contact information. At the bottom, there is a 'Recently added publications' section.

Carnegie UK Trust

Carnegie UK Trust has posted a new podcast, The Courage to be Kind. The podcast features Carnegie Associate, Dr Elizabeth Kelly, in conversation with health journalist, Pennie Taylor, discussing the Trust's learning about kindness in health and social care in Scotland over the past 12 months. In this new podcast, which is also hosted on the Scottish Government's National Wellbeing Hub, Elizabeth and Pennie explore the role of kindness in care settings from a range of angles across six short episodes. As well as looking at it from the perspective of staff wellbeing, and sharing practical tools and resources, the conversation also explores the transformational potential of kindness, with challenging messages for the way that we now manage the recovery and renewal of our health service.

conference taking place virtually in the week of 22 November 2021.

Share your practical experiences, insights and learning – the research problems you've faced, what worked and what didn't, and why. Some suggestions for themes, to get you started:

- Research in the pandemic and what comes next
- Making research more inclusive
- Qualitative innovation
- Survey developments
- Evaluative methods
- The use (and abuse) of research findings
- New directions with data
- 'Wild card': something different!

If accepted, your 20-minute presentation will be pre-recorded, with yourself attending the live session to take part in the Q&A. And you'll pay a reduced delegate fee.
